

Roselli was sent to Las Vegas in the 1950s to operate the mob's interests there, but he stayed under the control of the Chicago organization.

He went to Los Angeles in the early 1960s and was based there when Castro took over Cuba, breaking the mob's control over gambling and other crime activity on that island.

Various sources have said this was the reason the CIA went to the mob with the idea of killing Castro.